Note-not a storyteller, but, story writer. If the text is as radically accretive as the Brooks maintain, then the proposed construal of the relation is more of a reconstruction of what the best philosophical position might be on the nature of the relation. The stong insistence on the Gallic origins of this town and the simultaneous refusal of any Roman contribution to its founding serves as a means of contrasting it with Boussac, a modern town which will become a prison for Jeanne in which she will finally end her life.
